Subject of Review:	There are approximately 2 million farms and farm operator households in the U.S. They are extremely diverse, making statistical averages to characterize the population and their economic well-being meaningless. This report documents that diversity, including by the size of the farms they operate and by the demographic characteristics of the household. For these diverse groups, their economic well-being is described in terms of income and wealth statistics.
Purpose of Review:	The report is an annual publication with a calendar due date that provides public and private decision makers with a general overview description of the economic well-being of farm operator households.
