Subject of Review: Understanding where American households acquire food and what they acquire is essential to identifying which policies related to the food environment, prices, and nutrition education could improve diet quality among the population. The National Food Acquisition and Purchase Survey (FoodAPS) provides a complete picture of where households acquire food and what they acquire during a seven day period in 2012. This report describes where and how often households acquire food, at the national level, as well as separately for rural and urban households and households in each of the four Census regions.

Purpose of Review: The purpose of the review is to ensure the high-quality of the economic analysis, transparent explanation of methods, objective interpretation of results, and effective communication to the intended audience.
